(46-50) Read the passage given below and answer questions:

Conventional and outdated wisdom asserts that we each have 'learning styles' unique to ourselves. The implication is that if you don't learn using your preferred style you'll fail to acquire the knowledge desired. It also allows you an excuse not to work hard at learning something new. In Soft-Wired, however, Michael Merzenich shows that the plasticity of the brain extends to the way we learn. In other words, we can learn how to learn. Indeed, we should focus strongly on doing this. As well as reading or attending lectures, look at cultivating different learning styles-or, more precisely, learning strategies. Micromastery enables you to experiment and use a vast array of different learning strategies. Since all are designed to succeed brilliantly (with a modicum of persistence) at the micro mastery concerned, you have a perfect chance to increase your store of potential learning strategies. This in turn increases your ideational fluency - your ability to switch between idea sets that may be opposed or contradictory. If one strategy doesn't seem to work, no matter how wedded you are to it, you switch seamlessly to another. Ideational fluency is an attribute required of anyone working in a fast-changing, rapid-learning environment - the kind increasingly encountered today.

- (1) The ability to master both macro and micro skills
- (2) The ability to experiment and apply diverse learning strategies
- (3) The aptitude to learn better and achieve all goals
- (4) The ability to be a master of both process and product

49. In the passage, "cognitive flexibility" is defined as follows:

- (1) The ability to switch between opposing sets of ideas
- (2) Diverse learning strategies and ideas
- (3) Proficiency in one type of learning strategy
- (4) The ability to avoid multiple sets of ideas

(146-150) Read the following passage and answer the questions below:

As remarked by Dias, "no other firmament of legal or political theory is, so bejewelled with star as that of 'Natural Law' for it has engaged the attention of some of the greatest thinkers of all ages." The credit of giving birth to natural law goes to Greeks. After the Greeks, it was further developed and elaborated by the Romans. The early and original law of Romans was called 'Jus Civil'. Later on, the Romans developed another legal system called 'Jus gentium' which was considered to be the law of universal application. In the republican era of Rome 'Jus gentium' was reinforced by natural law or 'Jus natural' as it was commonly called. As pointed out by Brierly, by "Jus natural" the Romans meant "the sum of those principles which ought to control human conduct because founded in the very nature of man as a rational and social being." The law of nature is the expression of what is just against what is merely expedient at a particular time and place, it is what is reasonable against what is arbitrary, what is natural against, what is convenient and what is for social good against the personal will." Thus natural law was based on the rational and reasonable needs of a man's nature. According to Roman, natural law embodied the elementary principles of justice which were the dictate of rights and reason. In other words, those principles were in accordance with nature and were unalterable and eternal.
