LAW AND SOCIAL JUSTICE

INTRODUCTION

Social justice is an idea of reasonable or adjusted relations between the individual and society as estimated by the conveyance of abundance that incorporates individual action and social advantage openings. In Western as well as in more established Asian societies, the idea of social justice has regularly alluded to the way toward guaranteeing that people satisfy their cultural jobs and get what was their due from society.

Social justice means to abolish social inequalities and to provide equal opportunities to everybody in social life. Before 1947, there were so many social inequalities in India. The framers of the Indian Constitution were determined to end all such inequalities. In order to put an end to social inequalities following provisions have been made in the Fundamental Rights and Directive Principles of State Policy.

(a) Equality before Law:

In order to provide social justice, it is essential that those who live in the society should be equal before law. Article 14 of Fundamental Rights of the Indian Constitution provides that the State shall not deny to any person equality before law or equal protection of a law within the territory of India. It means that in India, laws do not discriminate between rich and poor, high and low.

(b) Prohibition of Discrimination:

It is essential for social justice that in the society all discriminations should end and there should be no privileged class. Article 15 of the Indian Constitution provides for a ban on discrimination based on caste, color, race, religion, sex etc. Every individual has been given the right to freely visit all shops, public restaurants, hotels, and places of public entertainments, wells, tanks, public bath, roads and other places of public utility.

(c) Equality of Opportunity in Public Appointments:

(d) Abolition of Untouchability:

(e) Abolition of Titles:

(f) Prohibition of Exploitation:

(g) Promotion of the Interests of Backward and Weaker Section of Society:

(h) Protection of the Interests of Minorities:

(i) Special Facilities for Weaker Sections of Society:

The problem of social justice is associated with social equality and the constitution makers were strongly affected by the feeling of social equality and social justice at the time of the independence. The terms, like Socialist, Secular, Democratic and Republic, were inserted in the Preamble for the same cause. In the Preamble the term justice is clarified as legal, social, economic and political. The word justice is protected by various clauses of Fundamental Rights and Directive Principles within the Constitution of India. Social justice denotes that all people are treated fairly without any social distinction. This ensures that the absence of privilege is limited to every specific segment of society and the conditions of poor classes (SCs, STs and OBCs) and women are strengthened. In line, economic justice denotes economic factors as the non-discrimination between men.

It includes removing conspicuous wealth, wages, and property inequalities. A blend of social justice and economic justice represents what is known as "distributive justice." The Preamble guarantees equality of rank and opportunities for all Indian people. Social injustice is a critical problem in Indian society. The analysis of a society's social stratification based on either caste or class, is primarily concerned with the definition of inequality. Louis Dumont, a French sociologist, on a separate level explained 'inequality' in the caste system. Bharat Ratna Babasaheb Dr.B.R. Ambedkar, the Chief Architect of Constitution of India, is the man of millennium for social justice, in the sense that he became the deliverer of or the Messiah of the Dalits, the erstwhile untouchables, Other Backward Classes (OBCs), and women, constituting 95% of Hindu population.

How has Social Justice affected the Law?

Areas of social justice in which a punishment becomes mandatory directly affect the law. These include civil rights violations, domes and abuse, forced marriages, statutory rights, immigration status and other social issues that call for an immediate action on part of ties. People who are directly or indirectly affected due to these offences or crimes should be provided with a platform to use law as t and attain legal representation to fight their case.

OPINION-

Conclusion

Justice is the concept of fairness. Social justice is fairness as it manifests in society. That includes fairness in healthcare, employment, housing, and more. Discrimination and social justice are not compatible. Social injustice is a critical problem in Indian society. The analysis of a society's social stratification based on either caste or class, is primarily concerned with the definition of inequality. In short it can be concluded that with the provision of Fundamental Rights and Directive Principles of State Policy almost all the arrangements have been made for the establishment of social justice in the country.

The solution to social inequality lies only within us. People should be mindful of the terms used by the disadvantaged, marginalized, social justice to weaken expectations, flout norms, and bring institutions to work. Despite the well-intentioned dedication to ensuring social justice by equalization or preventive discrimination policies, some friction in society has been created by government efforts. Even these practices which have little to do with social justice are done in the name of social justice.
